A HEALING & AWAKENING JOURNEY

For over 25 years, Stephanie has navigated the labyrinth of chronic illness, facing organ failure, enduring dialysis, and receiving two organ transplants. This journey hasn't just been about survival; it's been a profound awakening to the unconscious patterns that dominate our healthcare system and many of our relationships. Stephanie's vision goes beyond reforming healthcare—it's about evolving human consciousness.

She recognizes that patients and providers often fall into unconscious roles, perpetuating a system that can hinder true healing. By advocating for patient sovereignty as a fundamental human right, Stephanie is challenging us to break free from these limiting patterns. Her approach is revolutionary: she envisions a healthcare model where self-awareness and personal responsibility are as vital as medical expertise. This isn't just about better health outcomes; it's about fostering more authentic, conscious relationships—with ourselves, our caregivers, and our own bodies. Stephanie's work is a call to action for all of us to awaken from the trance of passive patienthood and unconscious caregiving. She invites us to step into a new paradigm where illness becomes a teacher, healing becomes a collaborative journey, and every health interaction becomes an opportunity for mutual growth and understanding. This is more than healthcare reform—it's a pathway to evolve our relationships, our consciousness, and ultimately, our human experience.

A RESEARCH & DISCOVERY MISSION

Scott is a semi-retired elementary school teacher, retired house-framing carpenter, and philosopher who specializes in philosophy-based counseling and on-going research into optimizing counseling programs for any individual. Scott's philosophical research has attempted to map out and illustrate the connections between mind, body and spirit, with implications for speeded healing as a support therapy for medical recovery. Included in his research are health support counseling methodologies such as TIR (Traumatic Incident Reduction) and Dianetics (traumatic incident do-it-yourself therapy). Having mastered Dianetics therapy during his experience with official Scientology, and after whistleblowing corruption in its management, Scott set about pioneering non-religious, common-sense use of the repetitive Socratic questioning developed in the evolution of Scientology auditing, with application to secular programs alleviating trauma, similar to TIR and Metapsychology, known and accepted renditions in use by the counseling community. Addressing spiritual and mental effects of trauma and illness are a key element of the overall approach to self-improvement therapy, and working back-and-forth from the general to the specific - from a person's general case condition to specific incidents of trauma - has given a broader overview of trauma and the healing process. One of Scott's contributions to this field has been discovering even more indirect, lighter methods of approach to heavy trauma through repetitive Socratic questioning, which can significantly alleviate trauma and facilitate healing. This lighter approach minimizes the phenomenon of "re-traumatization" that can occur when any approach is too direct, and is far easier for a trauma victim to confront. The essence of Scott's work has been facilitating improved methods of inner work that assist individuals to come out of their traumas, fears and disabilities and into states of personal and collective freedom.

A Service and Embodiment Journey

Leslie is a lifelong student of holistic health and personal development. Blending professional experience with her personal journey, she shares a compassionate and broad perspective on how we can thrive in a traumatized world. Leslie was inspired by her 10th grade psychology teacher to pursue a calling in Psychology and Social Work. Graduating with a Masters in Social Work in 1990, she proceeded to work with diverse populations in a variety of settings including: public schools, group homes, a residential treatment center, home-based, community mobile crisis, an Alzheimer's nursing home, a foster care agency and an adoption center, community mental health clinics, an integrative medical center, and outpatient psychotherapy through tele-health. She is a psychotherapist, clinical supervisor and has management experience. Leslie now specializes in helping individuals overcome trauma, manage chronic stress and unwind from social programming through an eclectic healing approach. She has successfully guided hundreds of clients through struggles with depression, anxiety and trauma to reach an improved quality of life by addressing root factors, earning client trust along the way. Additionally, Leslie was a competitive taekwondo athlete and an administrative manager for a national governing body for taekwondo, assisting with program development, athlete support and office management. Inspired by the study of natural law and her progressively deeper understanding of the moral foundation required for both personal/collective freedom and human thriving, she enjoys mentoring others and shares insights on natural law and self development through presentations, interviews and podcasts.

Scott Gordon: (Overview) Dual Approach: First aid: Help resolve immediate issues and improve their current state of mind (increasing willingness). Deep work: Guide them to examine and confront root causes of trauma and misdeeds (building courage). Mental health issues are viewed not as "illnesses" but as individual combinations of mental mechanisms and complexes unique to each person. Beliefs like "statism" can be seen as mental complexes - built from rationalizations that resolve cognitive dissonance around irrational beliefs. A therapeutic approach involves: Examining deeply-held beliefs in a safe environment. Uncovering when/why irrational beliefs were adopted (often during trauma). Helping people regain conscious choice over previously unconscious beliefs. We may use a process alternating between examining what is "right" and "not right" about a belief until the person has a realization that helps them reclaim their autonomy from "authority hypnosis" (accepting others' beliefs under pressure/trauma).

Stephanie MoDavis: (Overview) Foundation: Healing requires addressing both inner (psychological) and outer (environmental) landscapes through truth and wholeness. Process: Look inward during physical illness. Examine feelings of powerlessness and authority dependence. Practice self-reflection, meditation, and shadow work. Cultivate forgiveness (both of others and self). Outcome: As individuals heal and reclaim sovereignty, they naturally: Inspire others, Engage more with community, Help build decentralized support systems, Form healthier relationships

Leslie Powers: (Overview) Treatment Approach: Consider each person's unique context and full bio/psycho/social system. Integrate mind, body, and spirit care. Work with nature's self-healing capabilities. Key Principles: Recognize human interconnectedness and mutual impact. Follow "Do No Harm." Support individual freedoms and Natural Law. Avoid harmful effects of centralized control. Individual Responsibility: Take charge of healthcare decisions. Seek accurate information. Choose personalized treatment options. Self-educate actively.

Cory Endrulat: (Overview) Core Methods: Socratic questioning/coaching through open dialogue. Radical honesty and consistent principles. Taoist philosophical wisdom. Voluntary vs. coercive systems analysis. Practical Applications: Bio-individual health approaches. Sustainable food forests/alternative economics. Nonviolent resistance. Voluntary spiritual/religious practices. Fundamental Qualities: Love, faith, and courage. Freedom as foundation. Present awareness for healing. For Study: The Chairman's Experiment.
